JANE DEE HULL
SECRETARY OF STATE
STATE OF ARIZONA

I am pleased to present this annual report on the activities and accomplishments of the Office of the Secretary of State for Fiscal Year 1996. When I assumed this office in January 1995, my immediate objectives were to deal with safety, efficiency, morale and management, all of which I found to be lacking. And, during my first six months, we achieved or set in motion the achievement of all of those objectives.

During Fiscal Year 1996, with the help of very supportive staff, we broadened the vision and goals for the office and began to examine ways in which this office could better serve its publics through additional efficiencies and through advanced technology.

This office is largely a ministerial office, where many entities are required to make filings, usually on paper, so that the citizens of the State of Arizona will be able to examine those filings. Within this report, you will find just how many filings are made in this office on an annual basis. My goal is to reduce the amount of paper that flows through the office and make public access readily available using a variety of technologies.

One of the first things we accomplished was the opening of an Internet web site for the office in time to post the results of Arizona's first-ever Presidential Preference Election in February 1996. Details are included later in the report, but one point stands out – the web site received over 58,000 "hits" in the 24 hours immediately following the close of the polls!

Next, we turned to making filing easier for candidates and campaigns. The result was a very "user-friendly" software package which allows campaigns to record their donations and expenditures on disk in compliance with the state's campaign finance laws and to file those disks with our office when due (so far, by statute, a hard copy must also be filed). Then, we post this data on the Internet web site for all to see.

My goal for next year is to complete the conversion of all of our information files to the web site, while certainly maintaining other technologies for those who, like me, aren't very computer literate.

Please feel free to "e-mail" me with your comments and questions. My "e-mail" address is: jhull@mail.sosaz.com, or call or write at the address or telephone number below.

Very truly yours,

Jane Dee Hull
Secretary of State

Arizona's First Presidential Preference Election

On February 27, 1996, Arizona held its first Presidential Preference Election. In 1992, the law creating the Presidential Preference Election was first passed with bi-partisan support from the legislature. The law became effective in time for the 1996 presidential election. It was seen to be important for Arizona to be the first Western state to hold a Presidential Preference Election for two reasons: to draw national attention to the state and to encourage the presidential candidates to listen to what Arizonans had to say.

The Democratic and Libertarian parties held caucuses before 1996 and decided that they would choose their nominees and delegates through processes other than a preference election. They successfully sued the Secretary of State's Office to remove their parties from Arizona's Presidential Preference Election ballot. So Arizona's first ever Presidential Preference Election was held with participation only from the Republican party. Twenty Republican candidates were on the ballot.

The law relating to the Presidential Preference Election specified that the order of names of candidates on the ballot was to be determined by lots drawn at a public meeting. To accomplish this, Secretary of State Jane Dee Hull held a meeting in January and each candidate or designated representative was allowed to draw a number out of a cowboy hat. The number drawn was the corresponding ballot position of that candidate. Attorney General Grant Woods drew the number "1" for candidate Bob Dole.

Innovative methods were encouraged by the legislation to permit the counties to reduce the costs of the election. These innovations included: 1) consolidation of precincts into fewer polling places; 2) no rotation of names on ballots and printing of candidate names directly on ballot cards; 3) no write-in candidates; 4) provision for mail-in balloting in precincts with fewer than 100 active registered voters; 5) no automatic recount; 6) results reported by county and congressional district only. Pinal County tested an optical scanning system that enabled voters to mark their choices by filling in a box as opposed to punching a hole in the ballot card. Maricopa County considered itself one precinct with 111 polling places so that voters could go to any polling place within the county to vote.

In a first for the Secretary of State's Office, the Presidential Preference Election results were posted on the Internet by county and by congressional district. As results were reported, they were available to any and all who had Internet access. The web site received more than 58,000 "hits" in the 24 hours after the polls closed.

Steve Forbes received the highest number of votes, with Bob Dole in second place, and Pat Buchanan in third. Voter turnout substantially exceeded expectations -- 36.7% of registered Republicans voted in the election. Arizona is proud to have led the way for Western states to have an earlier role in the selection of the nation's presidential nominees.

1996 FALL ELECTIONS

After the Presidential Preference Election, the Secretary of State's Office Election Services Division handled the September 10th Primary Election and the November 5th General Election in which our nation's 42nd President was chosen. The Secretary of State's Office is responsible for the official state canvass which provides a breakdown of statistics from the elections, including voter registration figures, voter turnout and election results. The office also released statewide election results on the Internet for the fall elections. Vote totals for all races and issues follow, beginning on the next page.

Besides electing candidates, Arizona voters made decisions on proposed constitutional amendments and citizen initiatives. Signature petitions accompanied each initiative when filed and each measure had to have a minimum number of required signatures to be placed on the November ballot. The Juvenile Justice Reform (Prop 102) initiative was a Constitutional amendment and therefore required 169,442 signatures. The Drug Policy Reform (Prop 200), Fairness in Indian Gaming (Prop 201), Healthy Arizona (Prop 202) and Baseball Stadium Tax initiative measures required 112,961 signatures to appear on the ballot. All of those measures appeared on the November ballot except the Baseball Stadium Tax, which failed to file sufficient valid petition signatures with the Secretary of State's Office.

Two counties purchased new ballot tabulating systems in an effort to ease the burden and speed up the process of counting the ballots. Maricopa County bought a new optical scan system to be used for county wide tabulation on election night. Pima County also purchased an optical scan tabulating system but it was used only for counting early (absentee) ballots.

The Secretary of State's Office is a public office that is designed to be as accessible to the people as possible. On the two Voter Registration deadlines, 29 days before each of the fall elections, the office established a drop-off location outside the Capitol to accept last minute voter registration applications. On both nights, the Secretary of State and her employees stood outside from 4 p.m. until midnight so that anyone passing by could register to vote in time to cast a ballot in the next election. On both evenings, people continued to bring their registration forms right up until the stroke of midnight - - better late than never!

All in all, it was a successful year for the Election Services Division.
